Introduction

This study is part of two collaborative projects<sup>1</sup>: the University of Tsukuba Special Research Project on “The Civil Society, the State, and Culture in Comparative Perspective” (hereinafter referred to as “CSC Project”), and the “International Comparison of Pluralistic Co-existence of Societal Groups and Civil Societies” (part of the Research Project for the Promotion of the Humanities and Social Sciences, the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science), both of them coordinated by Yutaka Tsujinaka. The CSC Project has so far concluded similar surveys in Japan, South Korea, the United States, Germany, China, Turkey, Russia, and the Philippines. Bangladesh is currently in the process of carrying out the survey.

The first “Survey on Civil Society Organizations and Interest Groups” was carried out in Japan in 1997, and received the English name of Japan Interest Group Survey (JIGS). This JIGS acronym led us to later identify each country study with the country’s initial followed by JIGS. Therefore, for Japan, the survey was identified as J-JIGS, and this Brazilian survey is now named BR-JIGS. The Brazilian survey was concluded in late 2006, and this codebook is the first report of the BR-JIGS Survey.

This latest survey was carried out under the joint coordination of Edson Kenji Kondo and Yutaka Tsujinaka, with the cooperation of the Catholic University of Brasília (Luiz Siveres, coordinator of the program for Brazil; and Adelaide dos Santos, local coordinator for Brasília and general Brazilian operations coordinator). In total, five cities, including the capital city of Brasília, were surveyed: Belém (University of the Amazon, Cleide de Souza), Belo Horizonte (Pontifical Catholic University of Minas Gerais, Lena de Lacerda Godinho and Maria Tereza Almeida Santos), Goiânia (Catholic University of Goiás, Zuleika Pacheco), and Recife (Catholic University of Pernambuco, Alcivam Paulo de Oliveira).

The target areas have been expanded to five from the typically two to three cities of the previous surveys. The main reason was the attempt to obtain a good representativeness in a country that is known particularly for its great racial, cultural, social, geographic, and economic diversity. The details of the survey methodology, as well as the differences with the Japanese questionnaire taken as the basis for comparison, are explained below.

As expected in a survey of Brazil, the questionnaire was written in Portuguese and received the title “A Organização da Sociedade Civil no Brasil” (The Organization of Civil Society in Brazil). This is different from the title used in the previous publications, “Cross-National Survey on Civil Society Organizations and Interest Groups (country),” because, after considering the usage of certain expressions in Portuguese, it was concluded that the term “interest group” would invite misunderstandings. As a result, this term was dropped from the title, and a simpler title was chosen to avoid unnecessary confusion. The title of this report, however, being part of a comparative study among countries, maintains the standard title mentioned above that have been used in all previous reports. Also, as explained earlier in this section, the abbreviated name was chosen as JIGS preceded by the first letter of the country’s name. Furthermore, in order to avoid confusion with Bangladesh, Brazil is represented by the first two letters of her name, BR.

One important difference in Brazil’s survey is the use of several local databases, as explained later in the body of this report under “Methodology”. Preliminary examination of potential databases had indicated that the current level of reliability of telephone directories in Brazil was low, due to the negative consequences of privatizations occurred in the telecommunication services in recent years. At the same time, a database of “Private Foundations and Nonprofit Associations in Brazil 2002”<sup>2</sup> had been organized and published in 2004 by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) – the most authoritative government organization for national statistical data – in partnership with the prestigious Institute of Applied Economic Research (Ministry of Planning, Budget, and Management), the Brazilian Association of Non-Governmental Organizations, and the Group of Institutes, Foundations and Firms. This database was initially selected as the primary source of data, but as the survey started, it became clear that it had severe shortcomings. Finally, the survey team decided to resort to a collection of local databases in the selected cities, including the telephone directory, to build the local samples. In spite of this difference, the sample selection was performed through random lotteries from the combined set of databases. The case of Belo Horizonte is a special case where, although not relying on random sampling, it followed a particularly well designed procedure to obtain a representative sample for the area.

A second important difference from surveys in advanced countries such as Japan, Korea, Germany and U.S.A. is that this survey was entirely done through personal interviews instead of questionnaires sent by mail<sup>3</sup>. On one hand, the choice of direct interviews required a longer period of time to conclude the survey but, on the other hand, it allowed the implementing partner organizations in each area to expand their connections with the local civil society and provided important field experience to their students. Related discussions on response rate is detailed later in the body of this report.

Finally, this survey could have never been finished without the invaluable cooperation and efforts of many people. We want to show our deep appreciation for the contributions of project team members of the Basic Structures of Civil Society Group, particularly JaeYoung Choe, Hiroki Miwa, and Takafumi Ohtomo. Regina Yoshie Matsue and Reginaldo Santos Silva Júnior provided highly capable research assistance.

<sup>3</sup> However, the interview method used in the Brazilian survey was similar to those employed in other countries such as Bangladesh, Turkey and the Philippines where the mailing survey was not suitable because of unreliable postal system, expensive mailing costs, or the low possibility of respondents mailing the questionnaire back.

Survey on the Basic Structures of Global Civil Society in Brazil

DESCRIPTION OF THE SURVEY

The Brazilian survey was jointly implemented by the University of Tsukuba and the Catholic University of Brasília, with the cooperation of the University of the Amazon, Catholic University of Pernambuco, Pontifical Catholic University of Minas Gerais, and the Catholic University of Goiás.<sup>4</sup>

The questionnaire survey maintains a core set of thirty-nine questions that are generally comparable among all countries studied by the CSC Project (or JIGS surveys). In the particular case of Brazil, six additional questions examine the current outlook of civil society organizations regarding the major problems faced by the country, as well as her future prospects.

OBJECTIVE

The objective of this survey is to study the main features of civil society organizations in Brazil, their relationship with other institutions such as the government and political parties, and to obtain an initial view of the main trends taking shape in Brazilian society from the perspective of civil society organizations.

METHODOLOGY

Earlier advanced countries' surveys generally had the questionnaires mailed to sampled organizations, but in the specific case of Brazil the coordinating team decided to carry out the survey through direct interviews. One reason for this choice was the indication, during the early rounds of questionnaire testing, that respondents would resist filling out such a long questionnaire. Another reason was that a number of potential partner organizations were working with civil society issues and they saw the survey as a good opportunity to widen their reach and deepen their relationship with these organizations. These two reasons, when combined, indicated that direct interviews would be the ideal methodology to avoid the probable low response rate from questionnaires sent by mail, while providing many opportunities for partner organizations, their faculty and students to network with civil society organizations.

TARGET POPULATION AND SAMPLING

Sampling involved two stages. In the first stage, the CSC Project selected five capital cities drawn from four of the five regions of the country plus the capital city. Brazil is a geographically large country with regions featuring distinct cultural values, social priorities, and different levels of economic development. In order to reflect such diversity, the CSC Project selected the following cities and partner institutions:

1. Brasília (Catholic University of Brasília), the capital city.
2. Belo Horizonte (Pontifical Catholic University of Minas Gerais), from the wealthier regions of the Southeast and South.
3. Recife (Catholic University of Pernambuco), from the poorer Northeast.
4. Belém (University of the Amazon), from the Northern Amazon region.
5. Goiânia (Catholic University of Goiás), from the land-locked Center-West.

In the second stage, organizations were randomly drawn from several databases listed in Table 1 below.

Initially, we had expected to use only the IBGE-FASFIL database that the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) and partner institutions had produced in 2004, and contained all civil society organizations in Brazil as of 2002. Unfortunately, the unexpected large proportion of imprecise data found in this database led us to prioritize local telephone directories or other databases being actually used by local organizations. For illustrative purposes, Table 2 shows the number of unsuccessful contacts obtained from the first sample provided by IBGE.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> It should be noted that IBGE had produced a very careful study. The level of imprecise data shows the very dynamic nature of civil society organizations and the tremendous challenge that the production of a consistent and updated database for this sector is. Because the data produced by the IBGE-FASFIL study was not open for updating, nor was it in use by any organization, it was only natural (though not expected in such a high proportion) that after four years there would be a reasonable level of imprecise or incorrect data.

<sup>6</sup> This database contains approximately 270,000 entries and it is the result of a study entitled “As Fundações Privadas e Associações Sem Fins Lucrativos no Brasil 2002” and published in 2004 by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) with the cooperation of the Institute of Applied Economic Research (IPEA) of the Ministry of Planning, the Brazilian Association of Non-governmental Organizations (ABONG), and the Group of Institutes, Foundations, and Enterprises (GIFE).

Brasília	600	560	93.3%
Recife	600	537	89.5%
São Paulo	1400	Not available	Not available

Initially, São Paulo was one of the selected cities, but a strike of students and teachers at the Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo early in the year and security concerns resulting from a major attack on the police by an organized crime syndicate in May 2006 prevented the partner university from continuing the survey. Belo Horizonte, a major city from the same region as São Paulo was included in the survey, and in this process Goiânia, from the Center-West region, was also included.

SAMPLE GENERATION

The sample generation using the databases listed above can best be understood when organized by city as shown in Table 3 below.

Table 3 - Description of Samples in Participating Cities

City	Description of the Sample
Belém	Randomly generated sample of IBGE-FASFIL database.
Belo Horizonte	From the total population of civil society organizations (1200 valid registers from 12000 organizations in 18 databases listed in Table 1), selected 747 organizations located along the main transportation roads, covering every administrative region of Belo Horizonte.
Brasília	Randomly sampled the combined databases of IBGE-FASFIL and the local online telephone directory, generating 1316 addresses.
Goiânia	Randomly sampled the combined databases of the Municipal Council for the Children and Minors, of the Archdiocese of Goiânia, and the Literacy Project for the Young and Adults of the Municipal Secretariat of Education, and the online telephone directory.
Recife	Randomly sampled the combined databases of IBGE-FASFIL, the local telephone directory, and the database of the Municipal Council for the Protection and Promotion of Children and Minors (COMDICA).
São Paulo	Randomly generated sample from the IBGE-FASFIL database

SCHEDULE

The interview method selected in this survey required a much longer period for implementation. There was the need to prepare an initial instruction manual, then researchers from the coordinating team from the Catholic University of BSBa had to organize training sessions in each participating city to prepare the local coordinators and interviewers. Finally, implementing the interviews over a generally wide geographical area of these cities required a great deal of time. Finally, the limitations of the available databases that became clear only as the implementation began, posed an additional challenge to the speedy implementation of the survey. The schedule for the participating cities is listed in Table 4 below. The starting date refers to the date when the training session was carried out in the respective city.

Table 4 - Survey Schedule in Each City

City	Start	End
Belém	11/Nov/2005	30/Jul/2006
Belo Horizonte	8/May/2006	30/Jul/2006
Brasília	20/Nov/2005	30/Jul/2006
Goiânia	26/May/2006	30/Jul/2006
Recife	14/Nov/2005	30/Jul/2006
São Paulo	18/Nov/2005	May/2006

RESPONSE RATE

Considering that this survey was based on interviews, all those who received the questionnaire ended up responding it. In such a situation, the response rate is not a very informative indicator. The refusal rate, therefore, will be used as an indicator showing the proportion of organizations that were actually contacted, but due to several reasons (unavailability of representative due to vacation, postponed the interview past survey deadline, or plain refusal) ended up not carrying out the interview. Table 3 below shows the refusal rate for three cities, Belo Horizonte, Brasília, and Recife. Other cities did not record these rates.

Pesquisa: A Organização da Sociedade Civil no Brasil

Esta pesquisa está baseada em critérios científicos e visa analisar as várias organizações da Sociedade Civil, seus grupos de interesses e a forma que esses conduzem suas práticas dentro da sociedade brasileira.

O mapeamento que será realizado no Brasil faz parte de uma iniciativa internacional de projetos do Governo Japonês, implementados, no caso específico do projeto 'A Sociedade Civil, o Estado e a Cultura sob uma Perspectiva Comparativa Internacional', sob a liderança da Universidade de Tsukuba.

Este projeto teve início no ano de 1997 e, até o momento, os seguintes países já tiveram pesquisas realizadas ou estão em estágios avançados de realização: Japão, Estados Unidos, China, Rússia, Alemanha, Coreia, Turquia e Filipinas.

No Brasil, o projeto está sendo executado pela Universidade Católica de Brasília (UCB) e conta com a colaboração da Universidade da Amazônia (UNAMA), do Programa de Pós-Graduação em Educação da Universidade Federal de Pernambuco (UFPE) e da Pontifícia Universidade Católica de São Paulo (PUC-SP).

O projeto, ao mesmo tempo em que busca levantar um perfil qualitativo da sociedade civil brasileira, objetiva ser uma iniciativa piloto de consolidação de um banco de dados cobrindo todo o País.

Agradecemos, antecipadamente, à contribuição de V.Sa. no preenchimento deste questionário e reiteramos nossa convicção de que suas valiosas respostas representarão dados de mais alta importância para a transformação desta parceria multi-setorial e institucional, única no primeiro passo para a criação de um banco de dados do terceiro setor de abrangência nacional.

Nosso profundo agradecimento pela sua contribuição.

Survey: The Organization of Civil Society in Brazil

This survey has been scientifically designed to analyze civil society organizations and interest groups, and to learn about their current practice in contemporary Brazilian society.

Also, this survey is part of a larger project named Cross-national Survey on Civil Society Organizations and Interest Groups, which is led by the University of Tsukuba, Japan, and supported by various Japanese agencies.

This project started in 1997 and similar surveys have already been conducted in Japan, United States, China, Russia, Germany, South Korea, Turkey, and the Philippines. In Brazil, the Catholic University of Brasília (UCB) is coordinating the project, with the collaboration of University of Amazônia (UNAMA), Graduate School of Education of the Federal University of Pernambuco (UFPE), and the Pontifical Catholic University of Minas Gerais Paulo (PUC-MG).

This survey aims to depict a qualitative profile of Brazilian civil society and, at the same time, hopes to start a process of consolidating a database of civil society for the entire country.

We look forward to your kind cooperation in responding to this questionnaire, and we believe that your answers will become the founding pillars in this multi-sectorial and multi-institutional initiative in building a national database for the Third sector.

Thank you very much for your contribution.
