

7. Acknowledgements

For the completion of this thesis, I am indebted to many people. First of all, I would like to thank the Monbu-kagaku-sho, Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology, Government of Japan, which offered me a scholarship as financial support to be able to carry out my studies in Japan. Without their support, it would not have been possible to pursue studies in Japan for a student from developing country.

Secondly, my special thanks the staff of FAO who gave me their valuable time and priceless thoughts to understand ethics in a wider, practical and global sense. In particular, I would like to thank Dr. Jose Esquinas-Alcazar, Dr. Clive Stannard and Dr. Margret Vidar for helping us to do research, understand FAO, live in Rome, provide materials and allow use of facilities of FAO whenever I visited. The warm friendship of Dr Kakoli Ghosh in FAO is unforgettable for the time I shared with her during my repeated visits to FAO.

I would also like to express my appreciation and obligation to the people working for the Government of India in various institutes whom I interviewed in India. Their insightful thoughts on the Indian scenario helped to understand Indian perspectives and thoroughly apply them in my research. My special kind regards to Dr. Vasantha Muthuswamy who helped me with her unhesitant support, despite her extremely busy schedules during my visit to India. My special thanks is also due to Dr. Visalakshi and Dr. Rajesh Kapur.

Most importantly, my deep gratitude to Prof. Darryl Macer, my supervisor and a source of inspiration who not only taught me bioethics in academics but also in life, to understand and value human life and thinking with patience, tolerance and love. His unconditioned support and encouragement as a supervisor and guardian in Japan, showed me ways through many hardships and benefited me with a life long learning. His indescribable confidence in me and his instantaneous advice in my work improved my learning and thinking to a greater extent. His love and care gave me a new meaning in life, and helped me understanding ethics beyond academia.

I am also grateful to Prof. Yoshimasa Tanaka, my academic advisor, for his constant support, advise and motivating comments during my research and allowing my continue studies without any pressure and force. I am also indebted to Prof. Kazuo Watanabe and Prof. Takehiko Saitou for their thoughtful and critical comments on the drafts of this thesis.

I wish to thank Prof. Jayapaul Azariah, my former teacher in India, who introduced bioethics to me and his encouragement to learn bioethics as an academic field.

I can never forget the precious time I spent with the members of my lab, the bioethics laboratory in the University of Tsukuba, who helped, shared and stimulated me in several ways. I owe to them a lot, especially in making my life easier in Japan, with their timely help. Their friendship and strengthening support in my daily life in Japan is invaluable. My special thanks to Fumi Maekawa and Makina Kato for helping me to understand and translate things from Japanese to English for me, their help made my life in the university much easier and comfortable. Especially, I wish to thank Chalobon Kachongpadunkitti, Masakazu Inaba, Mary Ann Chen Ng and Dena Hsin Chen for the remarkable and committed friendship in the lab. I am also grateful to all the other members of my lab who have shared their time and thoughts with me.

The warm friendship of Nagina Mehboob and Samina Sharmin helped me to share the hard times by giving me company and feeling more of a home environment in Japan, despite our different backgrounds.

Lastly, but most indepth and esteemed regards for my parents, brother and sister who have trusted my confidence and loved me in every way. Their encouragement and care is undefined, and wordless, despite the miles of distance, while studying in Japan. My sister and I wrote our PhD theses at the same time, and I wish to thank her for her suggestions and useful tips and sharing our problems and solutions together. Humorous jokes and my brother's attempts to make me laugh for nothing, during my crucial times is something that will inspire me all my life. My deepest love to them for everything they gave me in my life.
